Branching message

- The student sees this message when they reach a branching point between sections of the test that are not locked.
- The student is reminded to check their answers before moving to the next section.
- The student will remain on this page until a selection has been made.
- If the student selects No, they will be directed to the progress summary page and from there they can navigate to the questions they want to check.
- If the student selects Yes, their answers for this section will be scored and they will be directed to the next section.
- This is not a locked section; once students have clicked Yes, they can go back and revise their answers and potentially improve their score for this section. As they have already been branched, changes to their answers will not affect their branching pathway for this point in the test.
Transition from a ‘locked’ section – numeracy

• This message is only seen by students in years 7 and 9.
• The student sees this message at the end of the non-calculator section of the numeracy test.
• The student is told how many questions are flagged and unanswered and asked if they are ready to move to the next section.
• The student will remain on this page until a selection has been made.
• If the student selects No, they will be directed to the progress summary page and from there they can navigate to the questions they want to check.
• If the student selects Yes, their answers for this section will be scored and they will be directed to the next section. They will not be able to return to the non-calculator section.
Transition from a ‘locked’ section – conventions of language

• The student sees this message at the end of the grammar and punctuation section of the conventions of language test.
• The student is told how many questions are flagged and unanswered and asked if they are ready to move to the next section.
• A student will remain on this page until a selection has been made.
• If the student selects No, they will be directed to the progress summary page and from there they can navigate to the questions they want to check.
• If the student selects Yes, their answers for this section will be scored and they will be directed to the next section. They will not be able to return to the grammar and punctuation section.
